

How does the carbon footprint of food vary across the world?

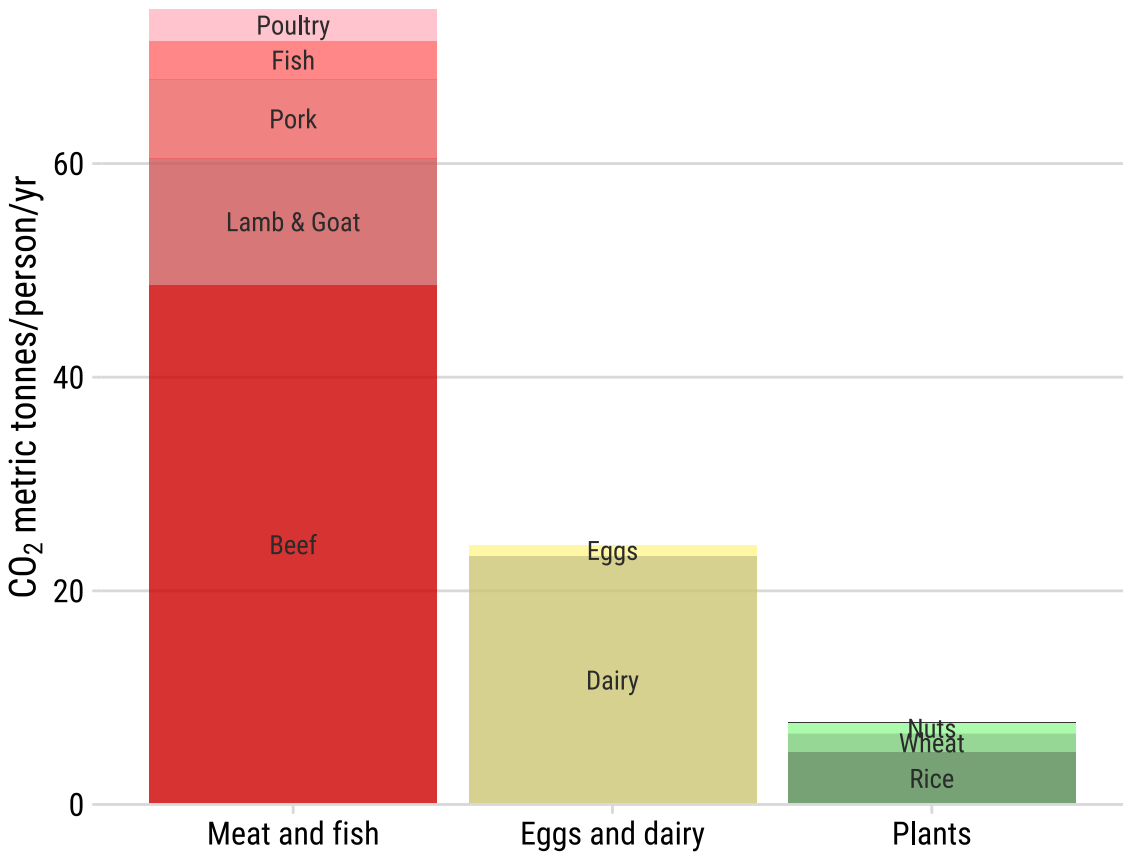

Food-related carbon emissions per capita vary considerably between countries. Why is this the case?

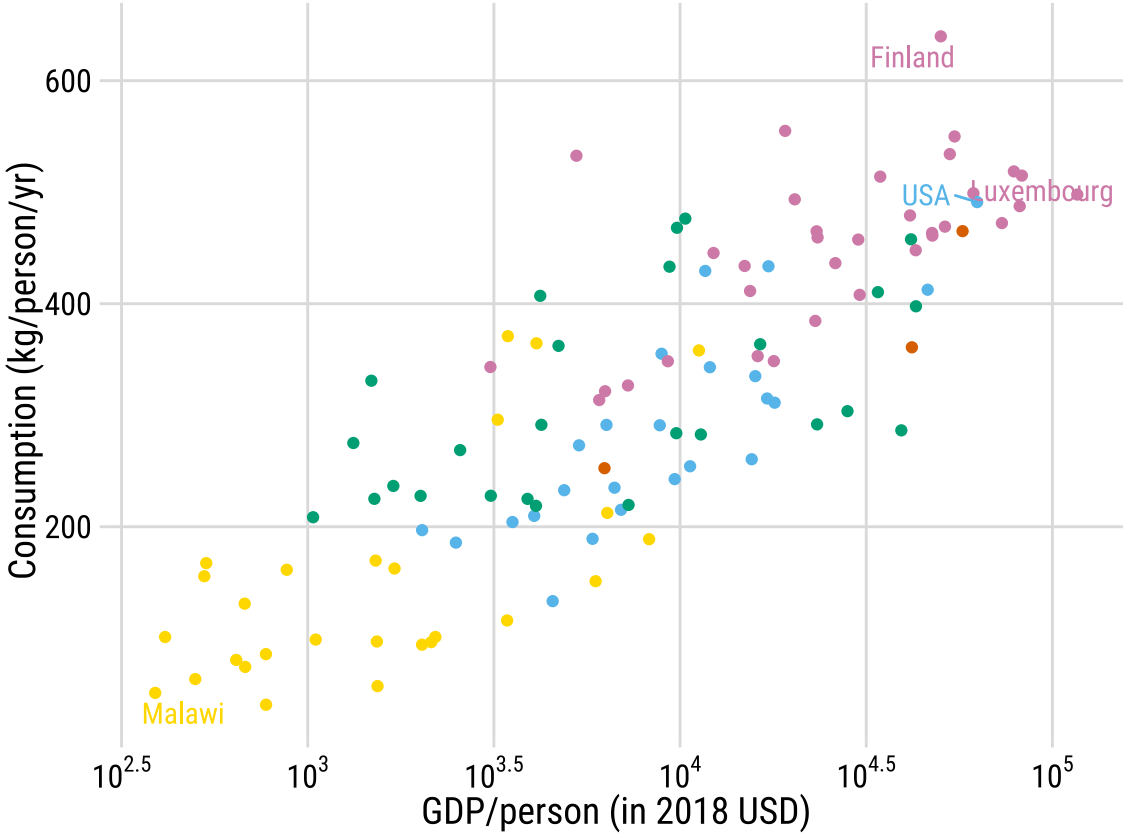

One reason is that different countries have very different diets...

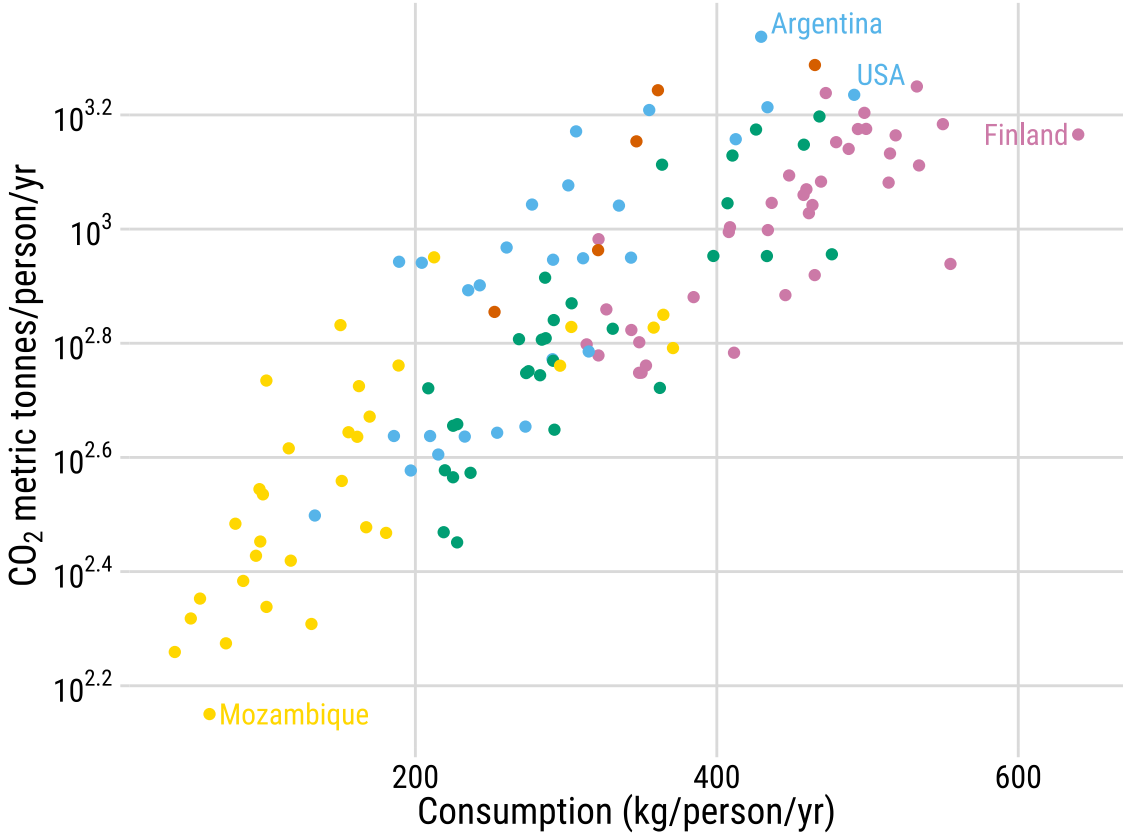

... and animal-based diets are more carbon intensive than plant-based ones

Another reason is that people from richer countries consume more food...

... which results in higher carbon emissions.

● Africa ● Americas ● Asia ● Europe ● Oceania